GEORGE H. HOLD upon power has been short-lived, his defeat occurring upon the first proposition brought before the chamber of deputies. The statesman and shrewd politician will now retire to his seat in the chamber as a private member, and from there he will annoy the new ministry.

THERE HAVE been introduced into the Senate and House of Representatives, this winter, seventeen bills for the "regeneration" of Utah, not counting the proposed amendment to the Constitution in reference to polygamy. There is a gentleman in Salt Lake who is willing to take an odds bet that Congress will pass none of them.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL HOWE is either a remarkably homely man, or he is entirely too modest for his position. It has been the custom to place the vignette of the postmaster-general upon postal warrants, but Howe has disregarded the rule and ordered the physiognomy of Benjamin Franklin to take the place of James. Come to reflect upon the matter, Howe has been wise. Some of his portraits have lately been published.

NOW CONGRESS is going to inquire into the incitement by the Mormons of the Piute and Navajo Indians to outbreak. The Mormons are not responsible for the late disaster on the New York Central Railroad, and the Rev. Talmage to the contrary, we believe the country does not look upon the Saints as ordering the assassination of President Garfield; but it would not surprise us to learn that some broad-minded Congressman had asked for information as to whether the Mormons had started the small-pox epidemic. There are some "powerful weak" minds in the American Congress.

JOHN ROACH, the Pennsylvania ship-builder, with his lobby, is making his regular winter visit to Washington. As usual he is begging for a big subsidy to enable him to run his ships to foreign ports. Mr. Roach, as a beggar, is too utterly and everlastingly chronic. His scheme may be a very good one for the country, but having had a good deal of experience with subsidies, the people of the United States are not particularly anxious to pay John Roach $10,000,000 a year for the sake of learning whether or not his plan would make America the great ship-building country of the world. If Mr. Roach does not find the industry profitable he should give it up and turn his attention to something else. The peanut trade is not yet overdone.

THE BILL for a new Congressional apportionment provides that the number of representatives in Congress shall be 320, an increase of twenty-seven. The bill, which will probably become law, will give one representative to 151,000 population, and while it will decrease the representation of some states, will provide a general increase for the west. There is no law applicable to the territories in this matter, but under the rule that has heretofore been observed, Dakota, New Mexico and Utah would be entitled to admission into the Union as states, each having population sufficient to entitle it to that privilege or right. The other territories would have to remain out for a time, though if the rule were followed, Washington and Arizona might be made states by the next Congress, two years hence.

It was a sad death, that of Caroline Richings-Bernard, which was telegraphed to the world on the 13th instant. She died from small-pox, and alone, so far as the presence of friends was concerned. When the disease attacked her she insisted that her husband even should not approach her, lest he contract the disease. Only the nurses surrounded her death bed. It doesn't seem so long ago that Caroline Richings was one of the stars of the concert stage. It was a surprise to the theatre-going public when the beautiful girl married little Bernard, the maestro. It seemed to be a love match, for although they were frequently reduced to extreme poverty, sometimes through his bad management, she clung to him with an affection that is the exception rather than the rule with "show people." The last time they were in Salt Lake, three or four years ago, as support to Di Murska, we believe, they were in the depths of poverty. The combination broke here, and with difficulty only did the lady and her husband reach the east. Afterwards fortune seemed to smile upon them somewhat, for news was occasionally received of their better success in the world. Mrs. Richings-Bernard was a highly superstitious lady, and now that she is dead her friends are recalling incidents which seem to indicate that there was something in her premonitions. It is said that at a recent dinner party given on the occasion of the thirteenth anniversary of her marriage, thirteen persons sat down to the table, when she remarked that the number 13 had always been an unfortunate one for her. On the 13th of the month she signed a contract by which she lost $60,000. She was sick 13 days, and died on the 13th of January. A good many people will mourn for Caroline Richings, whose sweet voice has delighted people in all the large cities of America.

One Voice

all over the land goes up from mothers, that says: "My daughters are so feeble and sad, with no strength, all out of breath and life at the least exertion. What can we do for them?" The answer is simple and full of hope. One to four weeks' use of Hop Bitters will make them healthy, rosy, sprightly, and cheerful.
